

LIABILITY DISCLAIMER

The Municipality of the County of Annapolis does not have control over the canoe routes, portages or wilderness tent areas listed in this guide, and therefore assumes no responsibility for the safety of the canoeist paddling the route, walking the portage, or using the wilderness tent areas.

We recommend that users approach all canoe routes and wilderness tent areas in a safe and responsible manner, and conduct visual inspections whenever possible and practical. Conditions can change through fluctuating water levels, addition of natural debris, and commercial logging activity. As we are not the owners of any of these lands or routes, any special arrangements must be made directly with the owners and you are accountable to them for any damage, loss or other problems that you may cause.

Although the information in this guide is believed to be accurate, we assume no liability for any errors or omissions that may exist, or for changes that may have occurred on the routes after the publication of this guide.

We recommend, as a supplement to the information herein, that you use Natural Resources Canada 1:50 000 topographical series maps of the general canoe routes.

Annapolis County Recreation Services requests that you read the sections on Safety, Equipment, Trip Planning and Wilderness Ethics before you travel on the lakes and waterways of the region. Always tell someone where you are going and when you are returning. Please be aware that many portages /canoe carries are not marked.

Please follow the principles of the Annapolis County Back Country Watch Program:
Keep a Watchful Eye on Our Wilderness and Help Keep It Clean !

Allains River offers a unique experience to the paddler. The route meanders through the Allains River Marsh, an area holding both historical and contemporary significance since the early 1600's. Adjacent to Fort Anne National Historic Park, this marsh was important to the French settlers, who farmed its upland and salt marshes, and careened their ships on its soft clay. Evidence of their original dykes can still be seen along the route. Struggles between the French and British saw the area change hands many times during the course of history, yet the marsh remained an important agricultural resource well into this century. With many of the Acadian dykes now eroded, most of the marsh has reverted back to its natural tidal state. A portion of the marsh dyke has been reconstructed as part of the Annapolis Royal Historic Gardens, and to create a wetland waterfowl refuge.

Due to the tidal nature of this route, the paddler will experience moderate currents and a significant fluctuation in water levels. The soft clay flats which are exposed at low tide are difficult to traverse by foot, and caution must be exercised. Paddlers are encouraged to refer to local tide tables, and plan their trip accordingly.
